

ELEVEN KILLED AND 118 INJURED WHEN AUTO, TRAINS CRASH

Automobile Struck by Express Bounds Into Face of Freight Train

MANY CUT TO PIECES

Several Victims Still Remain Pinned Beneath The Wreckage

KONSHA, Wis., Feb. 24.—(INS)—Eleven persons were ground to death and 118 others were injured, many of them perhaps fatally, in a double train and automobile wreck, it was revealed today.

Roaring through the night at a speed of more than sixty-five miles an hour, a passenger train of the Chicago, North Shore and Milwaukee Railroad struck an automobile which bounded into the face of an oncoming freight train. Those in the machine were literally ground to bits.

Most of the dead and injured were Chicagoans returning from a week-end in Wisconsin. The passenger train left Milwaukee at 10 p. m.

Blinding explosions followed the crash. Sheets of flame enveloped the mass of twisted steel, the mangled bodies of the dying and the wooded splinters of the freight train. The scene of indescribable horror was revealed to rescuers by bursts of blazing gasoline.

The cries of the dying, pinioned beneath tons of debris, spurred the work of men with acetylene torches as others carried away the injured.

By dawn eighty-five had been removed to hospitals, many with but a few hours to live, according to doctors.

The two Kenosha hospitals—St. Catherine's and the Kenosha—were overflowing with the injured and the dying.

Every one of Kenosha's physicians, aided by many recruited from Chicago and Milwaukee, were busy at the two hospitals administering to the victims.

Several of the victims still remained pinned beneath the wreckage despite the feverish operations of derricks and railroad cranes, the workers reported early today.

Hastily organized crews made up of nearby residents and railroad workers toiled throughout the night under the gleam of search lights. The tangled debris made it impossible to reach many of the prostrate forms.

Crowds of onlookers who thronged the locality were dazed by the horror of the scene.

Soviet Dashes Toward Atheism

This picture of Communism, fresh from the land of its origin, reveals a side of the new cult that seems to have been omitted from the platform of the American brethren. The shawl-covered women of the Soviets are passing bricks from hand to hand as the Government removes the last vestige of the Semenov Monastery, blown up to make way for a new "palace of labor."

The work of destruction is a part of the Soviet program for removing religion from the lives of the people. The elderly workman in the center foreground was formerly a monk who made his home in the monastery for more than 20 years. He has now turned Atheist and is assisting in the mad march against

"BUY IN BRISTOL"

By "The Stroller"

"Buy in Bristol" is a slogan which has been worn threadbare but evidently its meaning has failed to impress some of our residents.

Here is a story which I heard the other day:

A certain woman active in the numerous card parties which are so frequently scheduled here visited a local merchant to solicit a money contribution with which to purchase prizes for one of the parties.

The merchant very generously donated.

It was but a few days later when the same woman visited the same merchant to make a purchase and said:

"I must hurry as I am going to the city to buy prizes for our card party."

The merchant in question could not help but notice the irony of the incident.

BRISTOL WOMAN GETS LIFE TERM FOR MURDER

Maria Tilotta Sentenced To Solitary Confinement For Rest of Natural Life

WEEPS AS SHE HEARS IT

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—A Bristol woman today was sentenced to solitary confinement in the Eastern Penitentiary for life, having been convicted of aiding in the killing of her husband.

Sentence was pronounced by Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, upon Mrs. Maria Tilotta, 38, widow of Giovanni Tilotta, who met his death on December 28th, as the result of being severely beaten.

The sentence as pronounced by Judge Shull sends the Tilotta woman into solitary confinement in the Eastern Penitentiary for and during the term of her natural life.

Mrs. Tilotta was refused a new trial last week.

Mrs. Tilotta appeared in Court dressed in black and Sheriff T. Hart Ross was by her side when sentence was pronounced in English. The sentence was interpreted to her by Anthony Russo, of Bristol.

As Mr. Russo told the woman in Italian what the Judge had said she broke down as the interpreter repeated "term of her natural life." She continued weeping as she was led from the room by Sheriff Ross and was near the point of collapse as she reached her cell.

Mrs. Tilotta will be sent to the Eastern Penitentiary some time this week and will thus begin serving her term.

The woman and her lover, Giuseppe Guida, plotted to do away with Maria's husband, Giacomo Guicciardo, a cousin of Guida was brought into the case and he engaged three New York gunmen to come to Bristol for $500 and so severely beat Tilotta that he died the following day.

Guida has been electrocuted and Guicciardo is serving a life term for his part in the tragedy. The three actual killers have never been caught and are presumed to be in Italy.

Mr. Mitchell has been connected with the Langhorne bank for forty-five years and has for some time desired to be retired of the duties he has carried for so long. He will, however, continue as a director of the bank.

Thomas E. Coe, Jr., a graduate of the Wharton School of Finance, and for several years assistant trust officer of the Republic Trust Co., Philadelphia, will succeed Mr. Mitchell on March 1.

DISCUSS ROADS AND METHODS OF FINANCING THEM

C. C. Albright, of Lancaster, Addresses Bucks County Good Roads Ass'n

MAKES SUGGESTIONS

Advices Accurate Account of All Mileage of Township Roads Be Made

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—Addressing the afternoon session of the Bucks County Good Roads Association on Saturday afternoon, C. C. Albright, of Lancaster county, representing the township division of the State Highway Department, explained in detail the state, county and township reward act for building township roads.

The Legislature, he pointed out, appropriated $6,000,000 last year for township road work. A change was made in the percentage of money that can be paid out. In the big majority of the counties townships can receive seventy-five percent from the state for township road building, depending on the assessed valuation and the miles of township roads. In other cases only fifty percent is paid by the state.

"This has been a life-saver to many townships in Pennsylvania," Mr. Albright declared. "This year the county aid law came into effect. County Commissioners can, if they desire, make appropriations for the aid of township road building. Simply make the proper application to your Commissioners for county aid. In this manner a township road can be paid for by the state, the county and the township dividing the costs in certain percentages.

"The ideal condition in Pennsylvania will exist when every section no matter how remote, will have good roads that lead to the central markets and larger towns."

Mr. Albright told the 350 supervisors and auditors in attendance that a number of supervisors have taken advantage of the state maintenance reward, but that many have not. For township road maintenance $500,000 was appropriated by the Legislature but only a small portion of this was paid out. Under the law a township can get $100 per mile with a maximum of $200 for township road maintenance. Mr. Albright said that of course, this is not much money but that "it is a start and worth taking."

He advised all townships to immediately apply to the department for this maintenance money. As to the $6,000,000 state reward money, Mr. Albright said that the amount had been entirely exhausted. After June 1 this year the townships who have applied but have not as yet taken up the money will lose their quota and that amount will be re-divided.

Under the act no money can be paid out by the state for the building of township roads until the work is completed. It was suggested that if townships run short of money before the work is completed that a loan be made in the bank.

During an open discussion it was explained that under the vehicle code, a copy of which should be in the hands of every secretary of a board of supervisors, supervisors have the right to close a township road for a period of 90 days or less each year if they see that damage is being done by heavy travel or trucks. All that is necessary is to post the road. Violators are liable to a fine of $100.

That in Bucks county there are many miles of road that should be vacated or made into a private road, was another opinion expressed by an official of the association. If a road is vacated it must be done through the proper method in court. When the road is made into a private road it is to be kept up by the property owners living along the road.

That accurate account of all the mileage of township roads in every township in Bucks county, should be

His Maine 'Wet' Speech Rouse Ardent 'Dry' Ire

President Kenneth C. M. Sills, of Bowdoin College, Maine, one of the oldest institutions of learning in the country, is under fire as a result of his "wet" speech before a Kiwanis Club meeting in Maine. Questioning the "moral good" that prohibition has done, the college head roused the ire of the "drys" to such a point that he has been challenged to prove his assertions by the Rev. Frederick W. Smith, president of the Christian Civic League of Maine.

THIEF INVADERS SHACK AND STEALS $250 IN BOX

Contemptible Burglar Takes Every Cent from Jas. Richardson, Crippled Recluse

NEIGHBORS ASSIST HIM

During the past few months two of the most contemptible robberies have occurred in Bristol as ever recorded. One was the robbery of poor boxes in both St. Mark's and St. Ann's churches and on Saturday it was discovered that James Richardson, Cedar and Market streets, had been robbed.

James ("Jim") Richardson is a recluse and a well known character of the borough. He has lived the life of a hermit for many years and sits day in and day out in his squalid shack, with kittens as his only companions. "Jim" doesn't have much money. Old age has crept upon him and left its marks. He is badly crippled and unable to work. He gets a pension for having served in the navy. It is this money which buys the food, pays the rent and otherwise sustains him.

On Tuesday Richardson bought some fuel and paid for it. He, at that time had $250 in a cigar box which was beneath his pillow. He did not have occasion to go to the box again until Saturday morning when he discovered that the box and its contents were gone.

The robbery was reported to the police who are investigating. Neighbors have contributed to "Jim's" support until such time as he receives his pension.

Fathers Begin Their "Gym" Work at High School Tonight

It is expected that many members of the Fathers' Association will make their way to the high school "gym" this evening to begin "gym" instruction work under the leadership of Howard E. James, superintendent of the borough public schools.

The men desiring to participate in these classes which are sure to prove of interest to all, are asked to take with them a "gym" suit and a pair of rubber soled shoes.

Mr. James is a qualified instructor, having specialized in gymnasium work during his college days.

BANKERS DISCUSS PROBLEMS WHICH CONFRONT THEM

Interest Rates, Chain Banks and Mergers Are Given Consideration

OFFICERS ARE ELECTED

Various Committees Submit Reports and Annual Banquet is Enjoyed

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—Bankers from every section of Bucks County assembled here Saturday at the sixth annual meeting of the Bucks County Bankers' Association, which convened in both morning and afternoon sessions. Both sessions were presided over by William F. Fretz, president, of Pipersville.

The morning session was devoted to a general discussion of banking with particular attention being paid to the changes which are taking place in the business and what may be expected of the future if the present trend continues.

There was adjournment at noon for dinner which was served in the Salem Reformed Church and this was followed by an interesting discourse on "Personality and Service" by Dr. Camille Estornelle, of Camden, N. J.

The morning session opened with the singing of "America," after which there was the invocation by the Rev. S. E. Moyer, of Perkasie. Greetings from the Borough of Doylestown were extended by George Hotchkiss, burgess with the response and annual address to the association by William F. Fretz, Pipersville, president of the Association.

The advent of the chain bank and bank mergers came in for considerable discussion and the question was argued pro and con. It was generally agreed that neither the chain bank or the branch bank could ever successfully fill the place of the country bank.

The country bank is close to its patrons, knows their needs and realizes its responsibilities to the community. It was stated, "When you go to make a loan at either a chain or a branch bank the applicant is told that the matter will have to be taken up with the officials of the parent bank in some distant city," said one of those participating in the discussion.

Committee chairmen presented their reports either written or verbally with the following reporting:

Legislative, William H. Satterthwaite, Doylestown; blue sky, H. G. Mitchell, Langhorne; roads, S. F. Cressman, Quakertown; Education, Lester D. Thorne, Bristol; county publicity, Thomas B. Stockham, Morrisville; agriculture, Thomas Scott, Bristol.

In reporting on "roads" S. F. Cressman gave way to Clarence Benner, member of the County Commissioners, who gave a very comprehensive report of road conditions in Bucks County.

"What are the Legal Responsibilities of a Bank Director?" was the subject presented by Charles H. Oritt, Quakertown. The subject was ably handled as was the "What are the Obligations of a Bank Director to his Bank and Community," which was given by Wilson L. Yeakel, Perkasie.

Master Clarence Myers, Chalfont, who went as the Bucks County representative on the part of the bankers to the Leadership Training School Course, State College, gave his report which was intensely interesting and well received by the bankers.

Lester D. Thorne, Bristol, presented the subject: "Interest Rates." This created considerable discussion among the bankers.

Nominating committee headed by H. C. Detweiler, Quakertown, presented the nominations for officers for the ensuing year. The election which followed was unanimous and resulted as follows:

President, Lester D. Thorne, Bristol; vice-president, John B. Moore, Ringelsville; secretary, Walter K. Terry, Perkasie; treasurer, H. G. Mitchell, Langhorne.

The bankers then adjourned to the Salem Reformed Church where the women of that congregation had prepared and served a most excellent dinner, the menu of which was as follows:

Oyster cocktail, tomato bisque, celery, olives, roast turkey a la Salem; filling, gravy, cranberry sauce, white potatoes, peas, cauliflower, fruit salad, cherry pie and ice cream, salted nuts, coffee, mints and cigars.

Following the serving of the menu Dr. Estornelle was introduced by Thomas B. Stockham, of Morrisville. Dr. Estornelle gave a very interesting discourse.

OLD-FASHIONED SOCIAL

An old-fashioned social will be given by St. James's Sunday School in the parish house on Friday evening, February 28th, at 8 o'clock. There will be different kinds of games played during the evening and refreshments served. All are welcome.

Edward Fox, of Salem, N. J., was a Wednesday guest at his home on Radcliffe street.

Watching the Weather With Uncle Sam

A Series of Talks by Welby R. Stevens

(Assistant Weather Forecaster, U. S. Weather Bureau)

After all the reports have been received, the data entered and the necessary lines drawn on the weather charts, the forecaster must make a great number of deductions which will materially affect the conduct of business in both the country and the city, and occasionally mean the saving of human lives.

The first of these deductions is to locate where the center of the HIGHS and LOWS will be 12, 24, and 36 hours hence. This is accomplished by noting their previous direction and velocity of movement, the magnitude, velocity and direction of movement of the 12 hour pressure changes, and the direction and velocity of the upper winds. The forecaster is familiar with the normal movements of the various types of HIGHS and LOWS and is able to determine in most cases quite accurately how these various factors will deflect them from their normal paths.

The next step is to determine whether the distribution of temperature and precipitation around the centers of the HIGHS and LOWS will be changed when they reach the predicted locations. For example, approach to a large body of water or a range of mountains will exert a great modifying influence which must always be taken into consideration.

One of the most important things that a forecaster must decide, especially during the early and latter parts of the growing season, is whether a change to considerably colder weather will be accompanied by conditions favorable for the formation of frost. The problem is complicated because frost formation not only requires low temperatures, but also very little wind movement and cloudless sky.

It is very necessary to determine whether a LOW is going to decrease or increase considerably in intensity. If it increases precipitation will almost certainly fall over a wider area, the change to colder following its passage will usually be greater, more abrupt, and extend farther to the south. When a LOW is increasing and approaching either the coast or the Great Lakes, it is almost always neg-

ARMAMENT OR DISARMAMENT?

All in all the London disarmament conference has been disappointing to the laity everywhere, most of the demands and programs of the delegations leaving the impression that the conference was called for the purpose of encouraging competitive naval construction rather than to limit that construction.

Everywhere the people were led to believe that an agreement would be reached whereby all the leading naval powers would curtail building and postpone costly replacements. Now they learn that most of the powers are insisting upon larger navies, that Great Britain is unwilling to surrender her supremacy on the high seas and that even the American delegation is talking for addition of another battleship to the United States navy.

Are the delegations obeying the wishes of the people they represent? Obviously not. Before and during the conference public opinion throughout the world expressed itself for disarmament in the interests of economy and world peace. Tax-paying millions are tired of spending billions for armies and navies which could be safely pared down if all nations joined in the paring.

That pre-conference suggestion, heard from many quarters, that the delegations should be made up of representative private citizens was not followed and predictions as to the consequences if it was not are proving out to the letter. If there is ever to be honest disarmament and world peace, the masses will have to take the job into their own hands.

THEODORE SHUEY'S RECORD

Public life in the United States affords many instances of long and useful careers, but even more interesting cases are to be found among those public servants who cannot be said to be in public life as that phrase is applied to political leaders.

Perhaps the most interesting example of the latter is the career of Theodore F. Shuey, official reporter of senate debates, whose eighty-fifth birthday anniversary a few days ago was officially remembered by the senate. He has served the senate 61 continuous years without missing a single day of any session.

His remarkable career bridges that long and eventful period from the Civil War reconstruction period to the present. He heard the first messages of President Grant and personally knew Trumbull, Fessenden, Sumner, Zachariah Chandler, John Sherman, Allen G. Thurman and Roscoe Conkling.

His memory is an encyclopedia and history of the politics of the nation for 61 years. Hundreds of volumes of precious archives at Washington are the fruits of his labors.

No man ever got rich on a five-ace poker hand.

Civilization still moves ahead. Lumber is too expensive nowadays to put into spite fences.

It's all wrong, but a lot of fellows get along with women on nothing but a capacity for making beautiful apologies.

ECHOES OF THE PAST

ITEMS OF INTEREST AS CLIPPED FROM NEWSPAPER FILES

Jacob M. Winder was named postmaster of Bristol on February 23, 1895, according to the files of the Newtown Enterprise of that date.

Other interesting items found in this newspaper of 35 years ago are the following:

William Rue, of Langhorne, a brakeman on the Bound Brook Railroad, sustained a deep scalp wound at Yardley in a wreck of a coal train.

The Delaware river between Lambertville and New Hope was frozen over and hundreds of people both on foot and with teams crossed on the ice.

In digging a hole for a flagstaff at the Rush Valley School frost was found to have penetrated the earth to a depth of twenty inches.

Edward S. Brown, of Northampton township, whose eldest daughter died on a Thursday of diphtheria, lost his remaining daughter, Myrtle, two days later of the same disease.

David Ward, employed by Samuel C. Price at the Chain Bridge Mills, was badly burned when his clothing caught fire from a nearby stove as he slept.

Charles T. Warner, of Wrightstown, with four horses geared to a market wagon, had a runaway on Clayton's Hill. The wagon was badly broken and a load of live pigs dumped in the snowbanks.

SYNOPSIS

In a quarrel involving his wife, Joe Lane, radio singer, kills his manager and friend. Imprisoned for a year on a manslaughter charge, he decides to spare Katherine and their boy the disgrace of having a convict in the family. He pretends not to love her, believing she will turn to Dr. Merrill. But free, he cannot keep away from his boy. Little Pal is struck by an auto while running after his father. Joe takes him to Dr. Merrill and the latter agrees to operate to restore the boy's lost speech and control of his leg muscles if Joe will give Little Pal to Katherine and not see him again. Lack of money forces Joe to take his son to Dr. Merrill, after several days. Dr. Merrill finds out about Joe's sacrifice to spare Katherine and Little Pal. He tells Katherine. The operation is partly successful—the boy can walk, but his voice does not return.

"But you've done everything for me, Robert! You've been so kind—so good—"

"That's just it!" the surgeon said sharply. "I want you to love me as you love Joe, or not at all. You see, I've been noticing things—oh, not because I was jealous or hurt or anything like that. But because I love you so much that I want your happiness above everything else. And if you love Joe—why, that's the answer, isn't it?"

"I know," Katherine turned away, fighting back the lump in her throat. She wanted so much to make this man happy; she would have given anything to be able to return his love. But she knew, herself, that she never could—at least, not the way he wanted it. "Joe's changed a lot," Dr. Merrill said quietly.

"How do you know?" Katherine demanded.

"For nine months I've talked to him over the telephone once a week. He came to my office this afternoon. I asked him to. I felt that I had to find out where I stood. And now I know."

"Joe? Came to your office this afternoon? Where is he? What's he doing? Katherine's questions tumbled over each other in their hurry to escape.

"Joe's gone through hell. He's fought a long battle—won he, himself, doesn't quite realize what's happened to him. But I do. And that's why I'm talking to you this way, now. You remember the message I gave you from Joe when he brought Junior back to me. He said to tell you he'd never stopped loving you. And he hasn't."

"Did he—did he say that?" Katherine asked.

Dr. Merrill nodded. "Joe told me everything. He'd gathered a lot of miscellaneous information around the prison about how hard it was on a man after he was free—about how people hounded the men who had served their terms, and how their wives had to go to the station house at various times and answer questions: how it might affect a child who had an ex-convict for a father."

"He said that he had done a lot of thinking, and had decided that he couldn't stand to see you and Junior go through such degradations. He felt that he'd brought enough trouble upon you as it was without adding any more. And as he saw it, there was only one way out. He must make you leave him, and the only way he knew how to do that was to make you believe he didn't care for you any more and accuse you of being interested in me."

"Joe told you all that?" Katherine gasped. "He—he had only been doing that for my sake and Junior's! Oh, why couldn't I have known! The tears welled up in her eyes and rolled slowly down her cheeks. "Poor Joe! Poor, dear Joe! Where is he now? Is he all right?"

"He's all right," Dr. Merrill assured the girl. "But he's going to be a lot better after he sees you. You love Joe, and so does Junior. Neither of you will ever forget him."

So—"He shrugged his shoulders helplessly. "I've done the best I could, dear."

"You've been wonderful, Robert! But tell me about Joe. What's he doing?" There was an eager sparkle in Katherine's eyes that shone through the tears. Her lips were trembling, breaking into a smile.

"Joe's been working in a cafe on the East side. He's been washing dishes, and now he's a waiter. He's been doing a little singing, too, he tells me. But he's never been very much interested in the singing or he'd have done more. And what he will do now depends entirely upon you."

Dr. Merrill managed a smile. "Now, I'm going to order you off to bed. Get some sleep, and then call this number tomorrow morning." He took a notebook from his pocket and tore out a leaf, writing on it. "This is Joe's telephone number." He handed the slip of paper to Katherine. "You ask for James Lang. I've written it down."

"James Lang! Oh, he's—he's changed his name! Was it because—"

"Because he didn't want anyone to know that you or Little Pal belonged to a dishwasher in an East side cafe—because he thought you were going to marry me, and he was willing to hide himself, thinking you would be happy, and because—well, he just changed it, that's all."

As the surgeon closed the door behind him his shoulders slumped and his chin sunk onto his chest. Once he almost stumbled down the steps going out to his car. The crisp, cool air of the early spring evening swept across his face. He shivered slightly, and drew his coat more tightly about him.

"Feel the way my heart is thumping! . . . Notice how my two eyes shine! See the way my feet keep jumping!"

"Jumpin' with joy! . . . Get hot! . . . I'm some lucky boy . . . " "Muvver! Muvver! Daddy is singing!" Little Pal sitting up in bed, the radio on a stand beside him, clapped his hands in time to the music.

It hadn't been easy going those first few months. There were so many readjustments to be made. But with Joe beside her Katherine faced them bravely, her lips smiling, even as she trembled inwardly.

Morris Goldstein had been very good to Joe. That night he had sung "Little Pal" Goldstein had talked to him. This man managed a theatre on the East side, Joe discovered, and sometimes he arranged broadcasts for the actors. Now if Joe would like to try singing over the radio!

And the next day Katherine had called him. What happened when he went to the house and saw his wife and child together, face to face, for the first time in almost two years, was never very clear to Joe. He remembered only many tears, many smiles, and the fact that he held Little Pal close to him, and Little Pal reached up his hand, smoothing his father's face, and whispered over and over again: "Daddy! Daddy! You have come back to your Little Pal!"

The salary wasn't very much to begin. But there was the little money Joe had saved, and that, added to Katherine's, got them settled in a small apartment. The furniture was brought out of storage and crowded into the place. But they didn't mind. It was almost as if had been when they first started out together. Katherine really liked it.

"Hello, folks," Joe was greeting his audience. "I'm gonna sing you a song I know you'll all like. Pass th' mustard, boys! Get hot! Are you listening, Kitty? Here goes!"

Katherine shivered in ecstasy every time she heard those familiar words. However could she have stayed away from Joe so long, she thought. More and more she realized how much he meant to her, and how much she meant to him. Through the long separation they had been drawn even closer together.

"I'm in the Seventh Heaven! . . . Red Hot!"

It's easy to guess . . . z My baby said yes! . . . Junior was swaying, keeping time to the music. His shoulders went up and down, back and forth, in imitation of his father. Katherine remembered an evening a long, long time ago, when the child had done that. And all that had happened on that night! But that was over now. It was a new life—new everything.

"I'll say that she's got all the stuff . . . got all the things. She says that I'm angel enough without the wings . . ."

An' that's why . . . I'm in . . . the Seventh Heaven . . . Heaven. Having a heck of a time! . . . z "Well, folks, you have just heard James Lang singing his latest song hit. Now you're going to hear The Malibu Band. Jimmy'll be back with us again after that, so stand by, everybody! Stand by!"

essary to send out storm warnings for the benefit of shipping interests.

In the last few years, coincident with the great expansion in air traffic, the forecaster has had more burdens placed upon him. "Do you expect fog at New York City this afternoon?" is an example of questions he must answer almost daily. Or, if it is foggy when the question is asked he must decide when it will dissipate. If the sky is overcast the aviator wants to know the height of the clouds, and whether there is any likelihood that it will clear in the next few hours. He also wants information about the visibility, and whether there is any change of thunderstorms or dangerous shifting winds along his route.

The constantly increasing responsibility heaped upon the shoulders of the weather forecaster is a natural outgrowth of the economic development of our country, so he has every reason to expect that more and more demands will be made upon him in the future.

CARD PARTY

A card party will be held at the home of Mrs. Carman, 2031 Wilson avenue, on March 14th, for the benefit of the Harriman Hospital. Pinochle and "500" will be played and many prizes given. All are invited to attend.

GRAND THEATRE

"Sunny Side Up," the movie sensation of the year makes its debut at the Grand Theatre today for a three-day run. This film was the most popular picture ever shown in the principal cities of the country having played long periods in each.

Two great stars, an all-star supporting cast, a delightful story, plenty of comedy and a half a dozen sensational song hits is the combination presented in "Sunny Side Up," Fox Movietone musical comedy.

Janet Gaynor and Charles Farrell, making their musical comedy debut, give an amazing performance. Both have pleasing voices and sing their song numbers in a manner that brings bursts of spontaneous applause from the opening night audiences. Miss Gaynor also blossoms out as a dancer and proves she is as proficient in the terpsichorean art as she is in acting.

Sharon Lynn, Frank Richardson, Marjorie White and El Brendel, in the supporting cast of principals, give excellent performances and receive their fair share of acclaim.

DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, who authored "Sunny Side Up," from dialogue to words and music, have "clicked" with their first audible picture production and proved they are as talented in this medium as they are in concocting successful stage musical comedies.

Vickers was electrocuted shortly after noon at the pigment plant as he was fixing an elevator circuit. He had been working in the pit but a few seconds when there was a flash and his body was hurled across the excavation.

RIVERSIDE THEATRE

"So This Is College," which is being shown at the Riverside Theatre until Wednesday, is probably the first picture ever made depicting college life which bears any resemblance to actual conditions at a center of learning.

There is a refreshing restraint about this Sam Wood production which will go far towards reinstating a fast vanishing faith in the possibility of moving pictures depicting conditions as they actually are.

People who go to see this picture with the intention of laughing at miniature palaces which are supposed to be fraternity houses, or at staggering labeled professors, or at staggering wild-youth attired in plus-eights, called students, will be pleasantly disappointed. For there are no such spectacles in this diverting all-talking picture.

The chief reason for the picture's success at accurate portrayal lies in the fact that most of it was filmed on the campus of the University of Southern California and the majority of extras were taken from the student body.

Robert Montgomery, Sally Starr, Elliott Nugent and Phyllis Crane have the principal roles.

made and filed with the department, was another suggestion offered.

In answer to a question asked at the morning session as to what Bucks county has done with the gasoline tax money paid into the county treasury by the state, County Commissioner Ernest Harvey, gave out some interesting statistics.

"Every cent that Bucks county has received in gasoline tax money has been used on township roads and not one cent on county roads," Mr. Harvey said.

During 1929 in Bucks county the total cost of township reward roads not including Solebury township, amounted to $210,540.73. The state share amounted to $103,310.47; the county share was $47,909.24 and the township share was $59,321.02. The amount of state aid paid by the county was $11,333.97 and the amount of state reward by the county was $52,184.70 or a total of $63,567.77.
